04 Sep, 2025 | Share

Delta Cargo and Scan Global Logistics (SGL) are teaming up in support of the Civil Reserve Air Fleet (CRAF), with Delta designating SGL as its selected freight forwarder. The collaboration, established under a teaming formation agreement, strengthens both organizations' ability to deliver critical defense and humanitarian supply chain solutions while reinforcing Delta's long-standing commitment to the United States Transportation Command (USTRANSCOM).

"Delta is excited to work with a leading freight forwarder in Government and Defense logistics that has demonstrated its ability to support the defense supply chain at a moment's notice," said Peter Penseel, President of Delta Cargo. "This collaboration reflects Delta's commitment to serving those who serve and ensuring critical missions have the logistics support they need."

"Working with Delta strengthens our shared mission to deliver when it matters most," said Mads Drejer, Global CCO & COO, Scan Global Logistics. "Our decades of experience in defense and humanitarian logistics, combined with Delta's global airlift capabilities, ensure we are ready to support the U.S. Government and aid organizations around the world with speed and reliability."

Established in 1951, CRAF is a Department of Defense (DoD) readiness program that enables commercial airlines to provide supplemental airlift when defense aircraft capacity is exceeded. Through contractual agreements with USTRANSCOM, participating airlines like Delta volunteer aircraft to support vital defense and humanitarian missions around the world.

Scan Global Logistics has more than 45 years of experience providing logistics solutions for the United Nations, NATO, defense ministries, DoD contractors, and humanitarian organizations worldwide. As Delta's designated CRAF partner, SGL will continue to build on its record of supporting defense and relief missions across the globe.

Together, Delta Cargo and Scan Global Logistics will combine Delta's global network and aircraft capacity with SGL's logistics expertise to provide reliable and responsive solutions for customers and government partners worldwide.
